aminobutyric acid on membrane vesicles of rat cerebellar granule cells. A negative kinetic selectivity of the membrane-bound high affinity gamma-aminobutyric acid (GABA) receptor for GABA was found using a three-dimensional rate-zonal sedimentation technique. Our results show that the receptor-mediated Na+ transport is negatively regulated in GABA-concentration increasing mode, while the K+ transport is not influenced by GABA concentration changes. These results demonstrate directly that the receptor possesses a negative selectivity for GABA. Prevalence and incidence of hepatocellular carcinoma in the Netherlands: a retrospective analysis of the radiology data of the Dutch nationwide clinical trials and registries. In Western countries, the occurrence of hepatocellular carcinoma (HCC) is high and increasing. However, the knowledge of the prevalence and incidence of HCC is limited. The purpose of this study was to analyze the incidence and prevalence of HCC in the Netherlands in 2007-2009. The data of the Dutch nationwide clinical trials and registries were analyzed, and the annual incidence and prevalence of HCC in the Netherlands were calculated. The annual incidence of newly diagnosed HCC was estimated as 13.0 per 100,000 men and 7.7 per 100, 82157476af
